THE INAUGURAL BELMOND PHOTOGRAPHIC RESIDENCY WINNER

WINNING ARTIST

CECY YOUNG

Cecy Young was raised in Monterrey, Mexico, where she first discovered her passion for photography while attending art school. Determined to pursue her dream, she relocated to Paris to study at the Spéos Paris Photographic Institute. There, she began building her career, working with commercial clients in the beauty industry. With a desire to expand her creative boundaries, Cecy looked further East, driven by a longstanding personal interest in Japan. She has studied Japanese language and culture since childhood. Her work is a reflection of her cross-cultural journeys, blending diverse influences gathered on her travels.

Quote from Cecy Young: "I'm truly honoured and grateful to have been chosen for this residency. This experience will allow me to explore new creative depths and connect with a community that celebrates creativity."

About her winning portfolio on Japanese town of Atami: "I have been visiting Japan almost yearly since 2014, and during my visits I was struck by scenes that seemed frozen in time. Much of the architecture hails from the economic boom between the '60s and '80s. After the crash in the early '90s, many areas outside the urban centres were left behind, creating a sense of a nostalgia and better times. During a visit to Atami and other small cities in the Shizuoka Peninsula, I took an interest in the architecture particularly of the hotels that retain their old glamour. These areas are close to Tokyo and there was an expectation for these cities in becoming Tokyo's vacation spot. Atami, like many small Japanese cities, is changing, but the neo-futuristic architecture remains as a testament to an era of flourishing for geishas, big groups of salary men on company retreats and family summer getaways. As more people flock to big cities and Japan grapples with a low birth rate, the future of its small cities and villages is uncertain. While working in this project I felt I entered a fragile Showa bubble where time stopped. My work is a documentation that seeks to treasure this sense of time standing still, the lingering echoes of a bygone era while contemplating an uncertain future."

Cecy will receive an all-expenses-covered residency at a Belmond property location, a print publication with RVB Books, a photography showcase in a major global city, mentorship from Belmond's network of photographic experts, and a financial award of €15,000. Additionally, the winner's work will play a pivotal role in the Belmond Legends campaign, providing their singular artistic point of view and contemporary perspective on a Belmond destination.

A GLOBAL AWARD FOR EMERGING TALENT

A shortlist of 18 talented photographers from 10 countries were selected for the live judging weekend from a total of over 800 applications. The live judging took place at Castello di Casole, A Belmond Hotel in Tuscany, from 19-21 October, where the winner was selected alongside three highly commended artists.

Quote from juror Antwaun Sargent (writer and curator): "The Belmond Photo Residency offers an emerging voice an engaging environment to create something new in a place that offers endless possibilities to push the boundaries of their art. The site of the residency in Tuscany will allow for the artist to express their concerns and conceptual conceit in new and daring ways. The mix of portfolios this year offered fresh takes on the idea of travel photography. The inaugural winner of the residency, Cecy Young, has a daring curiosity in her pictures that are expressed through a range of emotion that highlight the places and people she photographs. Ana's photographs bring a newness to concepts of beauty, luxury and place."
